Angels of Kokoda by David Mulligan

Angels of Kokoda is a riveting novel based on Australian battles along the Kokoda Track in Papua New Guinea during World War II. The story centres on the intertwined lives of Derek, the son of Australian missionaries at the Gona Mission, and his 'blood-brother' Morso, a native Papuan boy of the same age. When all women and children are ordered back to Australia, Derek and Morso disappear into the jungle. At the same time that the Japanese land at Gona, the two boys and Derek's father become part of the small band of Diggers who save Australia from Japanese invasion.

1942 -Australia's Greatest Peril - Bob Wurth

1942 was the year of Australia's greatest peril - as Darwin was destroyed by bombing, Australian ships were torpedoed within sight of our coast, midget Japanese submarines attacked shipping in Sydney Harbour, and the Japanese army invaded New Guinea on its inexorable march south. This is the real story of the genuine and imminent threat to Australia in that fateful year. On the beautiful Inland Sea of Japan - the heartland of the Imperial Japanese Navy - and in frenetic wartime Tokyo, zealous staff officers and their illogical admirals debated the invasion of an almost defenceless nation. The Imperial Japanese Army, meanwhile, opposed the attack, foreseeing a looming military quagmire. In Australia, Allied defence chiefs all but dismissed the chances of holding Darwin. For months, Australia's fate hung in the balance

PACIFIC FURY - PETER THOMPSON

How Australia and her Allies Defeated the Japanese Scourge
PEARL HARBOR; SINGAPORE; CURTIN'S vs CHURCHILL; DARWIN BOMBING; POW CAMPS; THE BATTLE OF MIDWAY; KOKODA; BUNA; KAMIKAZE PILOTS; HIROSHIMA_

These words alone are enough to convey the terror, courage and drama of the Pacific War, when the balance of power stood on a knife-edge and when the future of Australia was on the brink - threatened by Japanese aggression on the one hand and British deception on the other. After a conflict that took an unimaginable number of lives and ended with the unleashing of the most powerful weapon the world had ever seen, the Allies emerged victorious. Australia, however, was criticised by Churchill and his generals for showing cowardice in the face of the enemy and for not caring about the fate of other nations. The endorsement of these claims by several military historians today shows that the smear has not gone away. Peter Thompson presents an account of the conflict that places Australian voices and action at the heart of the struggle. Based on exclusive interviews with eyewitnesses and written with all the pace and verve of a master storyteller, Pacific Fury brings the people and the battles to life in a sensational history not to be bettered in a generation.

KOKODA SPIRIT - PATRICK LINDSAY

A richly-illustrated and beautifully-designed hard-cover production, interweaving images and narrative to capture and explore the remarkable spirit of Kokoda - the history, the people and the place.

Patrick draws on his experience of many Track crossings, writing books and documentaries on the subject and his deep friendship with many of the Kokoda veterans to present readers with the next best thing to walking the Track itself. Featuring never-before seen photographs taken during the campaign and a series of specially-shot images of the Track and the people who live along it, Kokoda Spirit takes readers on a journey of discovery to one of the world's last frontiers as they walk in the footsteps of the Diggers and Fuzzy Wuzzy Angels who fought along the Kokoda Track to preserve Australia's

THE PATH OF INFINITE SORROW

The Japanese on The Kokoda Track

BY CRAIG COLLIE & HAJIME MARUTANI

Published by Allen & Unwin

This is a well researched and very readable story of The Kokoda Campaign of 1942 from the other side. It presents a chronicle of the Nankai Shiiti (South Seas Force) of the Japanese Imperial Army (IJA) from Rabaul to Ioribaiwa, and then the deeply humiliating retreat (designated in Japanese, "To change the marching order"). This Japanese experience of Kokoda provides a totally different perspective from the popular viewpoint most Australians have seen or read about.

Bringing together accounts of the campaign from captured diaries, Second AIF unit diaries and recollections from six Japanese survivors, the story starts with a detailed background of why Japan went to war with America. It ends with the account of a former medical orderly who returned to Papua New Guinea in 2005, to offer 250 miniature straw sandals to the spirits of his long dead comrades to "ease their long walk into the after-life".

For veterans of the campaign this may be a difficult book to read. It does not shun the brutality, acknowledging both sides took very few prisoners. It also deals frankly with the serious medical problems encountered by both sides.

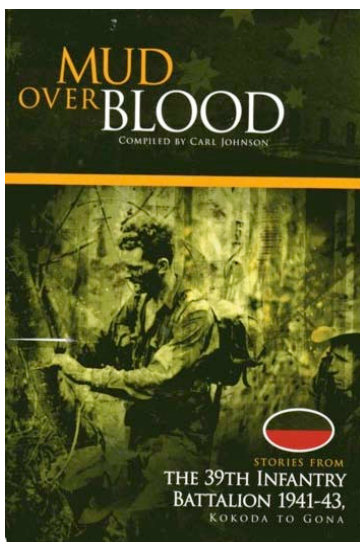

The authors are also frank about their use and reliance on oral history. As Alistair Thomson pointed out in ANZAC Memories: Living With The Legend, we often readjust our memories to create a more favourable position when retelling dramatic times in our lives.

It is to be hoped that Alien & Unwin will translate this story into Japanese and see it gets published in Japan.

MUD OVER BLOOD

Stories from the 39th Infantry Battalion 1941-43, Kokoda to Gona,

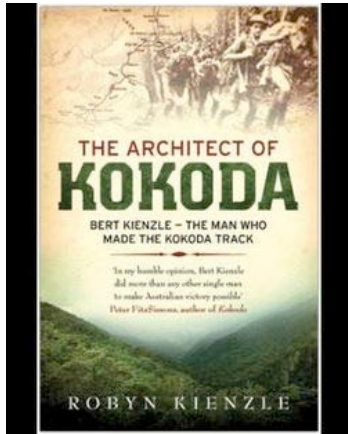

Foreword by the Governor General, Major General Michael Jeffery,

Compiled by Carl Johnson

Carl Johnson is not a newcomer to compiling war books so Mud Over Blood is not only very well presented but it is done in a manner straight from the heart and as such is a valuable contribution to a better understanding of the individual soldier.

The book comprises recollections of Battalion members, a collection of short stories, which form the basis of this book. In January 1943 the enemy was finished, but after numerous desperate battles, so was the 39th Battalion - so depleted with death, wounding and sickness that they were disbanded. Mud Over Blood, containing hundreds of photographs of those involved, is an excellent book and would not only be a great present for ex-servicemen but should be in all public libraries and schools. The reasons for this are two-fold. First the 39th Battalion with their unstated bonding caused the enemy enough delay and uncertainty to enable Australia to get AIF troops back from overseas. Secondly, without advocating war as a means to an end, the younger generation of Australia would do well to read and understand that Australians in Australia could well be a subservient people today if it was not for those men who were prepared, and did, lay down their lives for King and country.

The Architect of Kokoda

The Kokoda Track has become one of the most potent and identifiable symbols of Australian resilience from any of the theatres of war we've ever part of as a nation.

But it's interesting that in most of what's been written about this iconic series of tracks through some of the most Papua New Guinea's most inhospitable terrain that played such a vital role in one of this country's most significant World War Two victories, the name Bert Kienzle is rarely mentioned.

Yet the former gold miner has been described by many as the "architect of Kokoda", who's efforts in blazing tracks through the PNG jungle and cementing relationships with the region's natives laid the foundation for Australia's success.

Now, his story has been told by his daughter-in-law Robyn Kienzle in a book called "The Architect of Kokoda".
